

EDITORIAL

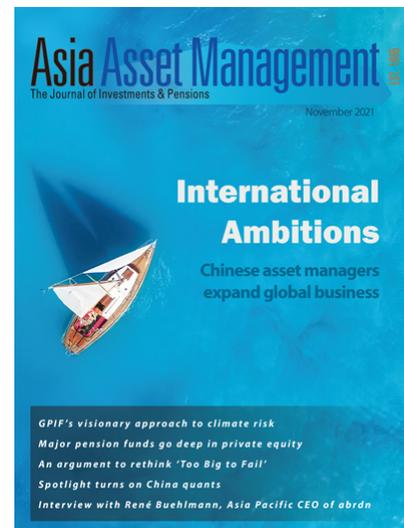

Do it yourself if you can

We accept – in principle – that private equity can deliver (somewhat) excess returns over most other asset classes. But there are a lot of qualifications attached to that, and most of them are very relevant to whether and how pension funds should invest in private equity...

Featured stories from the November 2021 issue of Asia Asset Management

- Wider horizons
- Going global
- From pandemic to endemic
- Rethinking 'Too Big To Fail'
- Banking on technology
- ESG goes mainstream
- Quants rising
- Falling short
- A rising asset class?
- A new start

Latest News

COP26 Files: Finance gets a shout-out – and we should be worried

| 3 November, 2021

Environmental: UN chief singles out Net-Zero Asset Owners Alliance as “catalysing change across industries”

Taiwan's PSPF investment income soars as local stocks rally

| 3 November, 2021

Pensions: The fund's assets under management increased 17.35% to NT$708.3 billion

Singapore's GIC, two private equity firms invest over US\$1 billion in greentech company

| 3 November, 2021

Investments: This is GIC's third major green investment this year

Australia's First Sentier promotes Lauren Prendiville to Asia managing director

| 3 November, 2021

Going Places: First Sentier also appoints Christy Goh as head of distribution for Southeast Asia

Analysis: Want financial stability? Fix the climate

| 3 November, 2021

Analysis: Report is a welcome gleam of reality at the height of the sometimes clouded US financial policy